The conflict landscape is reconstructed by combining features extracted from very-high resolution remote sensing imagery and by performing geospatial analyses, such as topographic analysis, visibility analysis and the extraction of optimal routes between given locations.

Surveyors can use the results of T-SHA in conjunction with contextual information and their expert knowledge to infer the location of contaminated areas and to re-delineate SHAs.